The Social Construction Of Gender Judith Lorber. Judith Lorber (1931-11-24) 20 November 1931 (age 87)|Amsterdam Monti 1919 (1844) Academic background: A native New York University, earning a master's degree in sociology from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She is the author of several books and numerous articles on gender roles, women's rights, and the social construction of gender. Her work has been influential in shaping the field of gender studies.

The author's name is also mentioned in the context of her academic background and notable works, with a focus on her contributions to the field of gender studies. Her research on gender roles and women's rights has been widely recognized and has contributed significantly to the development of the field.

In her early career, Lorber focused on the social construction of gender roles, particularly in the context of women's access to higher education and employment opportunities. She has been a vocal advocate for gender equality and has contributed extensively to the development of women's studies as an academic discipline.

Lorber's work has influenced various areas of social research, including gender studies, sociology, and psychology. She has been a key figure in the development of feminist theory and has played a significant role in promoting gender equality and social justice.

Her research has been widely recognized and has contributed significantly to the field of gender studies. She has been a key figure in the development of women's studies as an academic discipline and has played a significant role in promoting gender equality and social justice.

In her early career, Lorber focused on the social construction of gender roles, particularly in the context of women's access to higher education and employment opportunities. She has been a vocal advocate for gender equality and has contributed extensively to the development of women's studies as an academic discipline. Her work has influenced various areas of social research, including gender studies, sociology, and psychology. She has been a key figure in the development of feminist theory and has played a significant role in promoting gender equality and social justice.